Besides, there are some GPS modules out there, which can be used to track the location of a vehicle or a person. What are the different types of proximity sensors? There are three types of proximity sensors: inductive, capacitive, and ultrasonic. Each type has its own advantages and disadvantages. Inductive sensors are used to detect the presence of metal objects. Capacitive sensors are used to detect the presence of non-metallic objects. Ultrasonic sensors are used to measure the distance to an object. Each type of sensor has its own applications. For example, inductive sensors are used in automated manufacturing systems to detect the presence of metal parts. Capacitive sensors are used in robotics to detect the presence of obstacles. Ultrasonic sensors are used in navigation systems to measure the distance to a target. How do you choose the right proximity sensor for your application?
